the benefit of the 5th inst. She is about to be the best hats for the price in the United States.

THE LAST HOURS OF RED JACKET.
He was taken suddenly ill in the Council house, of cholera morbus, where he had gone with all his gay apparel and ornaments.
When he returned he said to his wife, "I am sick; I could not stay till the Council had finished. I shall never recover." He then took off all his rich costume, and laid it carefully away; reclined himself upon his couch, and did not rise again till morning, or speak except to answer some slight question. His wife prepared him medicine, which he patiently took, but said, "It will do no good; I shall die." The next day he called her to him, and requested her and the little girl he loved so much to sit beside him, and listen to his parting words.
"I am going to die," he said. "I shall never leave this house again alive. I wish to thank you for your kindness to me. You have LOVED me. You have always prepared my food, and taken care of my clothes, and been patient with me. I am sorry I ever treated you unkindly. I am sorry I left you because of your new religion, and am convinced that it is a good religion, and has made you a better woman, and wish you to persevere in it.
I should like to have lived a little longer for your sake. I meant to build you a new house and make you more comfortable; but it is now too late. But I hope my daughter will remember what I have so often told her—not to go in the streets with strangers, or associate with improper persons. She must stay with her mother, and grow up a respectable woman." When I am dead, it will be noised abroad through all the world—they will hear of it across the great waters, and say, 'Red Jacket, the great orator, is dead.' And white men will come and ask you for my body, and they will wish to bury me, but do not let them take me. Clothe me in my simplest dress—put on my leggins and my moccasins, and hang the cross which I have worn so long around my neck, and let it lie upon my bosom.
Then bury me among my people. Neither do I wish to be buried with Pagan rites. I wish the services to be as you like, according to the customs of your new religion, if you choose.
Your minister says the dead will rise. Bar-nabai will come and ask you for my body, and
